EXTRA SESSION LIKELY TO CONSIDER CURRENCY

President Willing if Action Does Not Conflict With Tariff Revision.

Possibility of currency reform legislation at the extra session of Congress appears to close observers to be contained in the present plan of the tariff makers to encompass the tariff legislation in one comprehensive bill rather than a series of schedule-by-schedule measures.

Under the ironclad rules of the House and the desire of the majority to be accomplished within a time set by the majority, it is probable that the currency bill will be hurried through the House in a limited and business expedient. It is thus possible for the House to rid itself of the entire tariff bill within a reasonable time.

Protracted Debate Expected. In the Senate there is sure to be a long debate over the tariff bill, and the administration may confer in advance all they please and frame an understanding on the general scope and policy of the legislation, but when the bill is actually before the Senate for consideration, the tariff makers will have their say, and plenty of it, and as many votes as they think necessary, with no man nor set of rules to say them nay.

The divisions of opinion in the Senate over wool and sugar, over the protection to be given the farmer and the clash of conflicting local interests are expected to prolong consideration of the tariff bill in the upper chamber until far in the summer. The final struggle between the conferees of the two houses will occupy weeks.

Idle Time for House. The House, meantime, will be without occupation. It has been suggested that this might be a good thing, as it would concentrate the attention of the country on the Senate and hurry the deliberations of that body. But to others, the prospect of spending the intervening months idling in Washington, adjoining the days of a time, is not acceptable. It is expected to be especially irksome to the ambitious new members of the Congress, eager to win their spurs and make a showing for the folks at home.

The advocates of currency reform propose to take advantage of this situation and urge the administration and the leaders to bring in currency legislation. They have the additional argument of the admitted crying need of currency legislation, affected only by a question of expediency.

President Wilson has assured callers that he is not opposed to immediate action on the currency; he is keeping an open mind on the subject. His first wish is to expedite tariff revision. If currency reform can be taken up without interfering with that program he is entirely agreeable to the undertaking.

NUCLEUS OF G. W. U. FUND

Friends of Institution Subscribe More Than $3,000 in Twenty-Four Hours.

Within less than twenty-four working hours after the plan for raising a fifty-thousand-dollar fund for George Washington University was proposed by Rear Admiral Charles Stockton, president of the university, it was announced today, more than $3,000 has been subscribed. Workers engaged in raising the fund report unusual success.

The fund, which is to include the payment of the $31,000 yet due upon the recently purchased home of the university on G street northwest, is being raised by friends of the institution in Washington, who are anxious to see the university not only free from debt, but having clear title to the property in which the work is carried on.

Outline of Plans. Plans for raising the money were outlined for the first time by President Stockton at the annual banquet of the Alumni Association Saturday night. They call for the raising of the $50,000 before next December by subscription.

The minimum amount to be subscribed is $20, payable in five yearly installments. "We have at last arrived at bed rock, and now have a solid foundation for the future. The plan is to concentrate as much as is practicable in this building for the present, then to use others as they may be erected in the immediate locality of our new home on G street."

A committee of alumni and friends of the school are securing the subscription. Pleased With Spirit Manifested. "The kindly spirit of the immediate response is most gratifying," said President Stockton. "We have at last arrived at bed rock, and now have a solid foundation for the future. The plan is to concentrate as much as is practicable in this building for the present, then to use others as they may be erected in the immediate locality of our new home on G street."
